Maëlle D oliveux | Maëlle D oliveux is a master of paper, creating magical paper illustrations full of depth and character. I particularly admire her illustration "High Society" where she created a beautiful contrast using only shades of red and blue paper. The depth of character she succeeded in portraying showing human emotions in precision and liveliness is outstanding. Maëlle is a French and Swiss illustrator based in New York . She holds a Bachelor's degree in Architecture from the University of Nottingham and is currently studying towards an MFA Illustration as Visual Essay program at the School of Visual Arts.

Follow the leader is a title, theme, task. Now you know, you don't have to ask. -Rakim, "Follow the Leader"

Being someone reasonably well-known in technology, I have been getting a lot of questions lately about Healthcare.gov. People want to know why it cost between 2 and 4 times as much money to create a broken website than to build a original iPhone. This is an excellent question. However, in my opinion, the most pressing question is why the US government has chosen to do such a terrible job understanding why a project went right. So, rather than explaining why paying anywhere between $300M and $600M to build the first iteration of healthcare.gov was a bad idea, I would like to focus attention on a model for software-enabled government that works. In doing so, perhaps this will be a step toward a better understanding of how technology might make the US government better and not worse.
